You can finally put all those DVD tapes in the player, you no longer have to set up a PC to watch something on your big screen. You can now watch movies on your HDTV and stream video to your home network. Blockbuster.com is the first video disk that can be played on your HDTV, the Player by Roku. Being the first of its kind, there will be limited supplies for the very beginning, but you will be able to get in line early if you want to be the first. Sadly, there is no word on how much it will cost to rent a movie, but you should get an idea of the experience soon. The Player by Roku is not just for playing DVDs, as it also has an app store that comes pre-loaded with apps like Netflix, HuluPlus, Vudu and Youtube. It also has Amazon Video and iTunes, so you will be able to pay per app. What's cool about the player is that it can output whatever is on the screen to your TV, whether that be apps, movies, even TV shows like Downton Abbey. So even if you are watching it on your phone, you can output it to your big screen. This is big news for anyone who has not been able to get a Netflix subscription, because now you have another option. Renting a movie at the store might just be a thing of the past, as DVD sales are expected to drop due to the digital downloads. There are more options now, and no longer will you have to go to your local Blockbuster to rent something. You can also pay per app in the store, unlike Netflix's one-size-fits-all.From gold to the next financial crisis, social media's power over markets is growing stronger. That's according to a new Bank of America Merrill Lynch study released Wednesday, in which the financial firm found that tweets are gaining importance as a way to predict market movements. ADVERTISEMENT Tweets are becoming increasingly critical in spotting potential market trends, and certain brands are especially bullish on the use of social media
