This tutorial is intended for beginners, for those who already have some familiarity with image editing but want to get started on a new project, and for professionals. 1. Getting Started Launch Photoshop Elements and make sure the Auto-Enhance tool is turned off in the Enhance section. This ensures that no data will be lost during the editing process. Also, in the Workspace section, you can change your workspace from Photoshop to Elements. See the screenshot in the right side of the tutorial for more info. 2. Resizing a Portrait Choose File > Open. In the File dialog, navigate to your desired image. Navigate back to the main menu, and choose Image > Resize. Browse to the image. Choose 5, 5 and resize the image to 200 px or large. Or, choose 100, 100 and resize the image to 200 px or large. In the dialog box, choose Straighten (shown in the screenshot below). You can also use the Artistic Edge tool for this purpose if you are familiar with that program. 3. Extracting a Portrait To extract a part of the original image, you need to add a layer by pressing Layer > Add Layer. In this example, you will extract the entire face from the image. Choose Lasso tool. Go to Select > Modify > Expand. Expand the lasso to 5 times. Expand the lasso to 20 times or more if you want to extract the body of the person. To save the face in another location, use the Move tool to drag the layer to a new location. Press Shift-Ctrl-Alt-V to navigate to the new location. If you do not want to create a new file, press F11 or Ctrl-I to bring up the timeline panel. Edit the timeline by using the red arrow to make the changes. Press Ctrl-I to close the timeline. Use the green arrow to lock the changes. 4. Controlling Pixel Density Choose Layers > New > Pixelate. In the Pixelate dialog box, click the thumbnail of the pixelation tool, shown below. Click a gray area to blacken it, or a white area to whiten it. 5. Stretching an Image Go to Layer > New > Layer Via Copy. Select the copy layer and go to Effects > Warp (shown below). A photocatalyst is an article that effectively decomposes or deactivates a variety of organic or inorganic pollutants present in the air. The photocatalytic processes can be used to solve the serious environmental problems such as air pollution, water pollution, soil pollution and solid waste pollution. In particular, the photocatalytic method for purifying the air can produce a large amount of water from the air to be purified, which has been widely used for purifying a polluted air source. Additionally, the photocatalytic method for purifying the air is useful to treat a waste gas containing the above-mentioned pollutants or contaminants, and can be widely used in industrial applications such as the semiconductor industry or construction fields. In the conventional photocatalytic process, generally, the photocatalytic material such as a semiconductor photocatalyst may be loaded onto a heat-resistant substrate, or may be supported on the surface of a heat-resistant substrate. Examples of the heat-resistant substrate include ceramic, metal, or glass. However, the above-mentioned conventional photocatalytic process has the following problems. First, a metal substrate is hot and toxic to humans. Thus, a method for coating the metal substrate with various coatings, such as PTFE, TiO₂, and photocatalyst, is required. The coating process is very complicated, and the coated photocatalytic material may be easily stripped off by abrasion. Further, the coated photocatalytic material may be thermally deactivated due to a high temperature. To solve the above-mentioned problems, a heat-resistant material, such as cenosphere, can be used instead of a metal substrate. The cenosphere is manufactured by converting a melted metal or glass material into a microscopic concave shape, and the cenosphere is thus defined by a plurality of substantially spherical concave shapes. The cenosphere has a significantly strong heat insulation effect because it has a high thermal conductivity. Thus, the cenosphere can avoid a reduction in temperature caused by heat transferred from a catalyst to a heat-resistant substrate or a decomposition reaction catalyst during the reaction. Further, the cenosphere is used in a certain area where the temperature is low. For instance, it may be used in a room having a low temperature. However, the above-mentioned conventional photocatalytic process still has the following problems. First, the metal cenosphere is expensive. Thus, the metal
